Ms. Newman graduated from Wayne State University Law School. She began her career as an attorney with the State Appellate Defender Office where she practiced for over 23 years. She argued hundreds of cases before the Michigan and federal courts. She has been a regularly featured speaker at the Michigan appellate bench-bar conferences, law schools and other groups. She frequently taught as an adjunct professor at the University of Michigan Law School for over 15 years. She has trained, supervised and mentored new attorneys and law students for decades and has advocated for women's rights and the professional development of women throughout her career.

In November 2017 Ms. Newman was hired as the Director of the newly created Conviction Integrity Unit of the Wayne County Prosecutor's Office. In this position Ms. Newman is working to strengthen the criminal justice system by investigating claims of wrongful conviction. In the three years that the Unit has been in existence it has received over 1500 requests for investigation. With a small staff of highly experienced attorneys and investigators, the Unit has reviewed over 500 cases and granted relief to 26 men, most of whom were serving mandatory life sentences. The work of the Unit has been positively featured in the New York Times, CNN, the New Republic and other publications – print, radio and television.

PERSONAL CASE HIGHLIGHTS

On October 31, 2011, Ms. Newman argued the case of Lafler v Cooper in the Supreme Court of the United States. The case issue was whether ineffective assistance of counsel during the plea-bargaining stage could be remedied following a trial. On March 21, 2012 the Court ruled in her client's favor in a 5-4 decision. The New York Times heralded the decision as the most important right to counsel case since Gideon v Wainwright. Legal rights groups and scholars alike cite it as one of the most important cases of that Supreme Court Term. Ms. Newman has presented on the case and its ramifications on the criminal justice system to many groups including the National Conference of Metropolitan Courts.

Ms. Newman returned to the Court in October 2013 to argue the case of Burt v Titlow. This was a follow-up case to Lafler v Cooper presenting a twist on the issue of ineffective assistance of counsel during the plea-bargaining stage. Interview footage with Ms. Newman was part of an ID Network “Snapped” episode about the case and her work on the case was highlighted in a book about the case by noted true crime author M. William Phelps.

Ms. Newman litigated the highly publicized case of People v Thomas (and Raymond) Highers in 2012, which resulted in the release of two brothers who had each served 25 years in prison for crimes they did not commit. The story garnered substantial media attention and Ms. Newman appeared with the brothers on local and national media including CNN. The story was featured on Dateline in 2014 and included courtroom footage and interviews with Ms. Newman.

In 2016, Ms. Newman’s client Davontae Sanford was exonerated and released from prison. The case captured the nation’s attention primarily due to Davontae’s young age and the confession of a contract killer to the same murders. Ms. Newman supported Davontae throughout the significant media interest including appearances on CNN, all major local and national news stations, a REELZ segment and a segment on Discovery ID’s the Real Story (Failure of Justice).

PROFESSIONAL WORK

Ms. Newman is active within the State Bar of Michigan. She has served on numerous committees and as co-chair of the Task Force on the Recording of Custodial Interrogations. On December 27, 2012, the Governor signed into law important legislation that was prepared and lobbied for by this Task Force, which mandates the recording of custodial interrogations in serious felony cases. Ms. Newman was instrumental throughout the process.

Ms. Newman co-chaired the Task Force on Eyewitness Identification Issues, which resulted in law enforcement and prosecutors adopting significant reforms in practices for conducting identifications and making charging decisions.

Ms. Newman currently co-chairs the Access to Justice Committee of the State Bar and is a member of several other groups within the Bar. The Michigan Supreme Court appointed her in 2019 as their representative to the State Bar Board of Commissioners. She is a former elected board member of the Appellate Practice Section.
